AT&T SOUTH CAROLINA’S INITIAL COMMENTS

On behalf of itself and affiliated entities, BellSouth Telecommunications, Inc. d/b/a AT&T South Carolina (“AT&T South Carolina”) respectfully submits these initial comments¹ regarding the Commission’s interest in determining “whether regulations should require bonding or other security from prepaid local exchange telephone service carriers to protect consumers of prepaid local exchange service and, if so, how such requirement should be implemented.”²

As an initial matter, AT&T notes that any bonding or other security requirements the Commission might adopt in this proceeding would apply only to regulated services offered on a prepaid basis by telephone utilities. However, many companies that are not telephone utilities offer unregulated communications services (including wireless services) on a prepaid basis. Imposing bonding or other security requirements on regulated services offered on a prepaid basis by telephone utilities would place those utilities at a competitive disadvantage vis-à-vis other providers of prepaid communications services (such as wireless companies) that are not subject to such requirements. AT&T, therefore, submits that the Commission should not adopt such requirements.

² See Notice of Drafting filed with the South Carolina Legislative Council on November 9, 2007.

If the Commission disagrees and decides to adopt such requirements, however, AT&T South Carolina respectfully submits that telephone utilities with a threshold number of employees or a threshold level of facilities investment in South Carolina should be exempt from those requirements. Bonding or other security requirements are intended to address concerns that arise when a prepaid service provider abandons service in a manner that leaves its end user customers without service and/or without being reimbursed for services they purchased but did not receive. AT&T South Carolina respectfully submits that on the few occasions when these concerns have arisen in South Carolina, the prepaid service provider involved had few, if any, employees or facilities in the State and, therefore, it was difficult to obtain financial recourse against the provider.

Those concerns, however, do not exist with facilities-based companies like AT&T South Carolina, which have consistently maintained a significant number of employees in South Carolina and have consistently invested millions of dollars in facilities in the State. It is highly unlikely that such companies would abandon service in a manner that leaves end users with little or no financial recourse. Accordingly, because the consumer protection concerns that bonding and other security requirements are designed to address do not arise with regard to such companies, AT&T respectfully submits that telephone utilities with a threshold number of employees or a threshold level of facilities in South Carolina should be exempt from any requirements the Commission may adopt in this proceeding.

Respectfully submitted on this 31st day of December, 2007.
